Detailed Description

Developed in partnership with Ellen Ernst Kossek, Ph.D., WorkLife Indicator measures the degree to which an individual combines or separates work and family (Behaviors), the degree to which an individual identifies with and invests in work and family roles (Identity), and the degree to which an individual feels in control of how he or she manages the boundaries between work and family (Control). The Behaviors factor describes the degree to which one combines or separates the tasks associated with work and those associated with one's personal life. This factor has two dimensions: Family Interrupts Work and Work Interrupts Family. The Identity factor describes the degree to which an individual identifies with and invest in their work and family roles. This factor has two dimensions: Work Focused and Family Focused.
